Environment
The Army Museum of WA is located within the heritage listed Fremantle Artillery Barracks precinct, built one hundred years ago as part of a national coastal defence system for the newly established state of Western Australia. It remains an operational barracks today, part of the Australian Defence Force. The barracks precinct encompasses: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• The Parade Ground area, with its extensive collection of significant military artefacts, vehicles, artillery pieces and equipment. Surrounded by an interesting collection of buildings with varied local architecture from a century of continuous use as a military establishment.</li> <li>• The main Barracks building, housing themed galleries depicting army service from early colonial times and the Boer War era, through World Wars I &amp; II and the prisoner of war experience, post-1945 conflicts, including the Vietnam War, right through to ongoing international peace keeping operations.</li> <li>• There are shaded, grassed rest areas and wide verandahs to the rear of the museum with limited refreshments available. There are toilets available, including disabled, and wheelchair access throughout most of the museum.</li> <li>• As the Artillery Barracks is a working Defence facility, all visitors are required to comply with reasonable instructions of serving members of the Australian Defence Force whilst on the property and to look to the Duty Officer (or your tour guide) for guidance about tour conduct and procedures.</li> </ul>
Transport
Transport is to be arranged by the school. There are extensive car parking facilities available within the parade ground area, including bus/coach parking on site. Your driver is invited to view the museum during the visit without cost.
